YOUR

SERVICE

The tall man with his right arm raised spoke in a low, clear voice. "...and that I will faithfully discharge the duties upon which I am about to enter. So help me God." He lowered his arm and smiled at Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury. The room was hot and drops of sweat trickled down the cheeks of the men.

"Congratulations, Chief," the Secretary said. "And good luck."

A few moments later, the tall man walked into the long, high corridor of the Treasury Building. He ignored the heat. His eyes shone and he held his head proudly. He, William P. Wood, once the Keeper of the Capital Prison, on this fifth day of July 1865, had been formally appointed the first Chief of the United States Secret Service.

Bill Wood was the first Secret Service Chief — not Allan Pinkerton, not Lafayette C. Baker, as many stories have indicated. Allan Pinkerton was on the War Department payrolls as a spy. Lafayette C. Baker was head of the War Department Secret Service during the Civil War, directing military activities similar to those of our Army's G-2 Military Intelligence Section today. But the Secret Service which is today one of the oldest Federal law-enforcement agencies, and which is still an agency of the Treasury Department, was officially born July 5, 1865 to fight currency counterfeiters.

During the Civil War, it was estimated that one-third of the money in circulation was counterfeit. The United States notes — the "greenbacks" — and the National bank notes which were issued as the new Federal currency in 1863 were being imitated in large quantities. Unless the counterfeiting could be put down, the public would lose all confidence in the Nation's currency and the economic structure of the country would crumble. It was the first job of the Secret Service to restore and maintain that public confidence.

And the job was done. Counterfeiting plants were seized by the score. Counterfeiters were caught, convicted, and jailed. Respect for the new crime fighting organization grew. Soon, other departments of the Government began to borrow Secret Service agents to investigate other crimes. Since there was then no other general Federal law enforcement agency it became common practice for the Treasury Department to lend Secret Service agents upon request.

For example, in 1898, during the Spanish-American War, a ring of Spanish spies with headquarters in Canada directed espionage activities against the United States. Secret Service agents borrowed by the Department of Justice set up a counter-espionage system and unearthed the enemy's hideout at Montreal. They exposed Lt. Ramon Carranza, naval attache of the Spanish legation, as the brains of the net, and Lt. Carranza was swiftly banished from the Dominion by its government.

The number one responsibility of the Secret Service — the protection of the President of the United States — began in 1901, after President McKinley was assassinated at Buffalo, N. Y. Immediately after the murder, agents were charged with the safety of President Theodore Roosevelt. On June 23, 1913, the protection was extended to the person of the President-elect. And on June 12, 1917, protection was extended to the members of the President's immediate family. Later, the Secret Service was authorized to protect the Vice-President of the United States at his request.

One of the most important assignments ever given to the Secret Service was the investigation of extensive land frauds perpetrated upon the Government. By 1905, at the request of the Attorney General of the United States, some 32 Secret Service Agents were lent to the Department of Justice to conduct this investigation. The Homestead Act of 1862 had thrown western lands open to settlement. Through dummy entrymen, several cattle barons obtained rich grazing land intended for homesteaders. Others contrived to get lands rich in coal, oil, and timber, on the claims that the lands were to be used for agriculture. In the course of the investigation, Secret Service Agent Joseph A. Walker was shot in the back with 17 shotgun slugs. He was then checking the suspected theft of coal from Government-owned land. His killers were arrested and tried.

Congress, in 1907, restricted duties and prohibited the lending of agents to other Government departments. With the approach of World War I,

President Wilson lifted previous restrictions and directed that the Secret Service be employed to uncover violations of neutrality.

Investigation led to George Sylvester Viereck and Dr. Heinrich F. Albert, who were knee-deep in German propaganda. Dr. Albert carried a mysterious brief case which he guarded most carefully. On July 24, 1915, Secret Service Agent followed Dr. Albert as he rode on a Sixth Avenue elevated train in New York City. At the 50th St. station, Dr. Albert left his seat to get off the train and forgot his brief case. In a flash an agent grabbed the bag and fled from the train.

The case held papers showing elaborate German plots to influence American public opinions by buying newspapers and magazines. There were plans to organize strikes in munitions plants; to corner the supply of liquid chlorine used for poison gas; to acquire an Aeroplane Company and its patents for German use; to cut off the supply of cotton from England. One sheaf of paper revealed that Germany through its secret agents, had actually bought a large munitions factory at Bridgeport, Conn., using dummy buyers. The plant accepted orders for ammunition from Great Britain and Russia without any intention of making deliveries.

The Secret Service also provides physical protection for the currency, stamps, and other obligations and securities of the United States. The Treasury Guard Force, consisting of 70 uniformed guards, is responsible for the safety of many billions of dollars in currency, bonds, and other securities in the Treasury Building and its vaults. These guards are trained in the use of all types of firearms, in self-defense, first-aid, and fire-fighting.

The counterfeiting of United States money abroad was not extensive until after the Second World War. The stability of the dollar made American money highly desirable in all parts of the world. Consequently, the protection of our currency against counterfeiting became a world wide necessity. The Secret Service moved to establish a close relationship with the authorities of other nations seeking their cooperation in fighting the counterfeiting of United States money on an international scale.

In 1947, Secret Service Agents, working with the French police, captured 11 counterfeiters and a total of more than two million dollars in counterfeit $10 bills which they had produced in an isolated farmhouse near Marseilles, France. The French authorities have continued to work with the Secret Service in cracking down on other gangs. By 1952, the counterfeiting of American money in France had been reduced to a nuisance instead of a menace.

Authorities in England, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and other European countries responded to the appeal for cooperation. They have succeeded in suppressing the counterfeiting of United States currency in their countries to the point where this crime is at present no serious threat.

Excellent assistance was also rendered to the Secret Service by British authorities in Hong Kong, China. There they smashed a ring responsible for the manufacture and circulation of some of the most deceptive $20, $50, and $100 bills ever produced.

In 1954 the Chief of the United States Secret Service accepted an invitation to attend an International Conference on the Suppression of Counterfeiting at Rome, Italy. There problems were discussed with representatives of the International Criminal Police Commission. This organization is made up of representatives of many foreign nations. It has as its primary activity the dissemination and exchange of information relating to crimes and criminals. The Commission specializes in the suppression of counterfeiting and cooperates with the Secret Service in this field in every possible way.

Our Government issues over 300 million checks every year. They go to Social Security beneficiaries, to farmers, to war veterans and their families, and to many others. Thousands of these checks fail to reach the people entitled to them because they are stolen from house letter boxes and are cashed by thieves posing as the rightful owners.

Every year hundreds of these forgers are arrested by special agents of the Secret Service which is authorized to "detect and arrest any person committing any offense against the laws of the United States relating to coins, obligations, and securities of the United States."

Your Secret Service is ever vigilant to protect your interests and those of our country.
